

What is the greatest thing in the world

What are the questions that, if you do not ask yourself, you might never answer?

What do you most want to learn during the next thirty days? Six months? Right now?

For what are you willing to be famous?

What headline do you wish for your obituary? With more time, courage and money, where would you travel? Who are your heroes? Which friends encourage you, lift you, and help you reach your potential? Which are corrosive and must be quietly jettisoned? What would you change about yourself by waving a magic wand?

What will you stop doing (to free the time for something else)? What relationships must you repair or strengthen? Would you be happier living more simply and less expensively? What comforts would you sacrifice for greater meaning in your life? How can you ensure you devote enough time to reflection? Which of your parents' attributes do you most want to inherit or avoid? What is unforgivable? If required to give a speech two weeks from now, what topic would you choose? What surprising decision changed your life? What would you do if you had no fear? If you could return to your youth with one adult knowledge, what would that be? If you could meet your great-great-great-great-grandparent, what would you ask? What about your great-great-etc.-grandchild? What do you want your distant descendants to know about you? What is non-negotiable? If you received $10,000 (not for paying bills or debts), what would you do with it? Who has been your most influential teacher? What shall we do with your mortal remains? If you went back to school for a degree, what would you study? What does it mean to eat well? What does it mean to live well? What does it mean to be human? What does it mean to be rich? What is the most charitable thing you've ever done? Are you surrounded by people who love you? If not, how can you change that? How can you reduce your environmental footprint? What can you do to improve political discourse? When was the last time you hosted someone of a different race or religion at your dinner table — and what common threads could you discover? What is your next creative adventure that will truly challenge you and expand your skills? How do you relieve the pain of daily living? What would cause you to reject a role model? What makes you trustworthy? Who would describe you as "my best friend ever"? What would you die for? What would you kill for? What is a unifying purpose for humanity? Who is the happiest person you know? What is the evidence of your good fortune? Whose death, past or future, most disturbs you? What is most broken or incomplete in the world? If you could solve a global problem, which one would it be? What is the most important thing you can teach a child? What is worth saving money for? When did things not go your way? What did you learn? How do you invest the 62 hours each week that you're not sleeping (56 hours) or working (50)?

What are more questions that, if you do not ask yourself, you might never answer?

Answer these questions at artieisaac.com.